STATE DEPT IS CONCERNED OVER GERMANY'S ATTITUDE

U. S. Officials Puzzled and Dismayed by Provocative
Nature of Statements

AN UNLAWFUL ACTION

Thought Germany Would At Least Try To Describe The Incident As A Mistake

By Kingsbury Smith
I. N. S. Staff Correspondent

WASHINGTON, June 14—(INS)—Germany's defiant attitude toward the sinking of the American merchantman Robin Moor in the South Atlantic caused considerable concern in State Department quarters today.

American officials who are handling the case were both puzzled and dismayed by the provocative nature of the Berlin statements, especially the implied threats that any other American ship caught carrying contraband is likely to be sunk in the same manner as the Robin Moor.

This attitude on the part of Berlin was seen in official quarters as constituting a virtual challenge to President Roosevelt's recent reassertion of the American doctrine of freedom of the seas.

In view of the unlawful nature of the German submarine commander's action in setting the 46 passengers and crew of the Robin Moor adrift in the South Atlantic without providing for their safety, it was thought Berlin would at least try to pacify the United States by describing the incident as a mistake.

This was the procedure followed by the Imperial German Government during the early stages of the first World War when American ships were attacked or sunk. Germany at that time sought to smooth over each incident. It described the various attacks on American ships as "unfortunate accidents" and offered full compensation in almost every case.

The attitude of the present German Government appeared to officials here to be quite the contrary and in complete conflict with the previous indications that the Nazis were eager to do everything possible to avoid precipitating American entry into the war.

One high official of the Government expressed amazement at what he described as the stupidity of German psychology. The view prevailed in official quarters that Berlin's defiant attitude would leave this Government little alternative but to stiffen its own stand concerning the lawlessness of the German move and the necessity for adequate measures to protect American shipping on the high seas.

This Government, one official spokesman said, will never concede that Germany has any right to sink an American vessel on the high seas, irrespective of whether it may be carrying goods which the belligerent powers have arbitrarily listed as conditional contraband. To do so, it was said, would represent a renunciation by this country of its traditional freedom of the seas policy.

As soon as President Roosevelt receives a full report on the sinking of the Robin Moor next week, State Department experts expect to start drafting a blistering diplomatic protest to Germany, demanding full reparations for the loss of the ship and the 35 passengers and crew who are missing.

This fellow traveler was my introduction to England at war. We chatted back and forth about my first impressions (15 words censored), and the detour made by a crater in the main street. Such things she took as a matter of course. Per-

To Fly Records of Freighter's Sinking To Washington

Recife, Brazil, June 14—Photographic and written records of the sinking of the American freighter Robin Moor were scheduled to be flown to Washington today by Philip E. Williams, third secretary of the U. S. Embassy at Rio de Janeiro.

Eleven survivors of the sunken vessel who were picked up and brought into Recife by the Brazilian steamer Osorio told harrowing stories of the ordeal which followed the sinking of the vessel by a German U-boat. All reports indicated that the vessel was torpedoed some 20 to 25 minutes after she was abandoned by her eight passengers and her crew.

Two surviving members, engineers Karl Nilson, and Virgil Sanderlin, said the vessel was carrying 1,000 tons of steel and motor cars when she was sunk.

Antonio Santos, the vessel's Portuguese cook, quoted the German U-boat commander as saying to the Robin Moor's captain: "I feel sorry for you, but your ship is carrying war material to the enemy."

All survivors agreed that the action of the submarine was so swift that it allowed no time for consideration of the objections of the Robin Moor's captain.

Four lifeboats launched from the Robin Moor clung together for five days of relative calm weather. Then the seas began running high, heavy rains fell and the boats separated.

DEFENSE COUNCIL OUTLINES ITS WORK

Commissioners at the End of April

FUNCTIONED FORMERLY

The Local Defense Council of Bucks County was appointed by the Bucks County Commissioners at the end of April, pursuant to the terms of an Act of the Pennsylvania Legislature, approved March 19, 1941, entitled the "State Council of Defense Act." The Council had been functioning unofficially prior to its formal appointment and during the past month it has been laying the groundwork for an active organization.

Because the Local Defense Council of Bucks County's effectiveness will depend upon the understanding and co-operation of every citizen of the county, the following general information regarding the defense program for the County is made public by the council:

1. What is meant by "defense" as far as Bucks County is concerned?

There are two kinds of defense—active and passive. "Active" defense is that which is carried on by the organized military forces—the Army, Navy and Marine Corps. Although co-operating fully with these services, the Local Defense Council is directly concerned with "passive" defense—which

Here and There in Bucks County Towns

Herbert Adler, 30, Doylestown, was taken into custody a few days ago by Inspector L. J. Agin, of the U. S. Immigration Service, Gloucester, N. J.

Adler had been working in a Doylestown hotel as a dishwasher for about a year, up until about 10 days ago. He came to the United States from Germany in December, 1938, on a "visitor's pass," and since that time has had the pass renewed several times. When he recently made application for another renewal the immigration authorities started a checkup.

Under the regulations, a "visitor's pass" does not allow a foreigner to work in this country. This is the regulation that Adler violated and for that reason he was taken back to the Gloucester Immigration Station, Saturday. Whether he will be deported to Germany Inspector Agin did not know. When Adler's last application for a 60-day extension was refused by the United States authorities, Adler took up the matter with the German Consul in New York City. He was advised that if he wanted to return to Germany he must first go to his local draft board and register properly, notifying them of his intentions of leaving.

Adler feared being placed in a concentration camp in case the United States got into the present world conflict. He had prepared to return to his native country and did appear before the local board to register. An alien cannot leave the United States until he secures permission from his local draft board.

Chief of Police Felix R. Gowan and Inspector Agin questioned Adler at length. He told them many interesting things about the cost of living in Germany, and the stringent discipline under Hitler rule.

United States authorities are rounding up a number of aliens who came to this country on "visitors' passes" and have taken jobs.

MEDALS PRESENTED AT A FLAG WEEK PROGRAM

Shirley Peet and Jos. Paoletti
Recipients at Bristol
School Exercises

TWO LOCALITES SPEAK

Appropriate to Flag Week, a patriotic program was conducted for eighth grade students in Bristol high school auditorium, yesterday morning, at which time two Bristol residents gave addresses, and American Legion and Auxiliary medals were presented to the two pupils of grade eight chosen for the honor.

The medals, presented for honor, scholarship, service, Americanism, leadership and courage, was awarded to Shirley Peet and Joseph Paoletti, these being presented by Mrs. Arthur F. Zug and Percy G. Ford, respectively, representing the American Legion Auxiliary and the Robert W. Bracken Post.

Mr. Ford spoke to the group of students on the subject of "Good Citizen-ship" and the Rev. W. E. Preston Haas, pastor of Bristol Methodist Church, delivered an address on "Our Flag."

Following the singing of "Our Flag," and the reading of Scripture passages by William Bartholomew, a member of the faculty, the assemblage pledged allegiance to the flag.

The Rev. Mr. Haas recalled a recent story carried in newspapers telling of a man who had come to this country some years ago from Europe, his native country now being ruled by a dictator. The newcomer to these shores was notified that a relative in Europe had died and left him a large sum of money, "but in order to get it he was required to return and live in his native land. This he refused to do," continued the Rev. Mr. Haas. "And when asked the reason for his decision he made this significant reply: 'If anyone knocks at my back door at four or five o'clock in the morning, I know it is the milk-man.' He knew what American stands for. We have no secret police, waiting only for a chance to take a man away to a prison or concentration camp. That man felt he was part of this country, and wanted the freedom which only our flag guarantees."

The speaker continued by telling of a traveler who met three men in a restaurant in a foreign country.

THE FLAG

Throughout the United States exercises will be held commemorating the adoption of the Flag by the Continental Congress on June 14, 1777. Flag Day was first officially observed by proclamation of President Wilson in 1916. But there is still general lack of knowledge of the history of Old Glory.

Old Glory? That name itself was not attached to the flag until 1831, when Capt. William Driver of Salem, Massachusetts, saluted the gift of a new emblem with those words.

The colonies used a number of flags during their history, the most important the so-called Union or Grand Union flag raised by General Washington at Cambridge early in 1776. This flag, similar to that of the British East India Company, had the 13 alternating red and white stripes, but the crosses of St. George and St. Andrew appeared on the blue field. Naturally the colonists had no use for those symbols after independence was declared.

Although the "Betsy Ross" design was adopted by the Continental Congress in 1777, prints of the day show no stars in the blue field until 1780. Evidently the 13 stripes were considered sufficient to represent the number of Colonies then joined in a union.

And how many persons are aware that for 23 years there were 15 instead of 13 stripes on Old Glory? In 1795, after the admission of Vermont and Kentucky, two stripes were added to keep the number equal to the aggregate of states. It was not until 1818 that Congress specifically reduced the stripes to the original number and ordered that the number of stars should correspond to the number of states.

Even as recently as 1912 there was tinkering with the star field. President Taft fixed the arrangement as six rows of eight stars each. Just what will happen in Hawaii, Alaska, or Puerto Rico will statehood has been debated.

How much Mrs. Elizabeth Ross had to do with the design finally adopted by Congress is known to every school child. Today Old Glory stands for something that has become dearer with the years because it is now denied to many millions who once enjoyed it—Liberty.

FATHER HAS A DAY

This year's reports on Father's Day indicate that Father is on the way up. In fact, it may not be long until Mother will have to look to her laurels as the most important member of the household.

Merchants report an increase in Father's Day purchases. He will receive presents of an astounding variety from cigarettes to household, from shoes to hats. Telegraph companies expect an increase in Father's Day messages this year.

A nice point about Father is that he never objects to people being funny about his day. The sanctity of motherhood somehow takes the humor out of Mother's Day. In fact, it is suspected that a sentimentalist thought up a day for Mother. But Father's Day undoubtedly was the work of a humorist. The fact that both turned out to have a magnificent sales appeal merely attests to the practicality of the American mind.

But Father, humorous or not, is at least learning that he counts for something with his family. A little appreciation will not hurt him a bit. Never before have fathers enjoyed such prestige. And it is about time.

"Shortly after the introduction, the traveler said to the first stranger, 'I suppose you are a subject of England.' The man answered that he was. Turning to the second man the traveler said 'And you are a subject of Germany,' to which the man agreed. And turning to the third man the traveler said, 'Of course you are a subject of the United States of America,' to which the third man replied characteristically, 'I should say not. I am one of the owners.' Of course he was right. Those of us who are Americans do not think that we are the owners of our government and country, and that we are the trustees of its traditions. We call our state government the commonwealth, meaning the privileges and opportunities are held in trust for the common wealth or for the good of everybody."

The Rev. Mr. Haas stated that "We should dedicate ourselves to the spirit of the flag of America. Do you remember the oath of the Athenian citizen? It was as follows: 'We will never bring disgrace to this our city, by any act or dishonesty or cowardice, nor ever desert our suffering comrades in the ranks. We will fight for the ideals and sacred things of our city, both alone and with many.' Several years ago a fine young man came out of a court house in a little town in Indiana, holding in his hand, papers that meant more to him than even his college diploma. They were his citizenship papers. As he looked at the flag flying over the court house, he said with great feeling, and a new meaning, these very familiar words:

"Your flag and my flag
And how it flies today.
In your land and my land,
And half the world away.
Rose red and blood red,
Its stripes forever gleam.
Snow white and soul white,
The good fore-fathers' dream.

"Your flag and my flag,
And oh how much it holds.
Your land and my land
Secure within its folds.
Your heart and my heart
Beat quicker at the sight.
Sun-kissed and wind-tossed,
The red, the blue, the white."

Percy G. Ford, who also spoke on this occasion, stressed respect for the flag, and told the students that "No matter what country your forefathers came from, they are all Americans." He advised the girls and boys not to listen to all the news of the terrible misunderstanding abroad, nor to read about it. "Read good books; get out in God's country this Summer, and play ball, and ride your bikes. Get yourself jobs if you can, if it only means $3 or $4 a week. You'll be doing something worthwhile. Another thing you should do is to think, for only by good thinking can you do good things."

Miss Annie Heritage, a member of the faculty, introduced Mrs. Zug and Mr. Ford to the group.

CHAPTER EIGHTEEN

Tony didn't know how he got through with it; what he said, what everyone said. That night, that day, and at dinner, his mind spun in circles. He had failed... had been bested. Marie, engaged to Northem's pawn, seemed lost. Whatever he said, she wouldn't believe him. But he wasn't completely beaten...

Dinner was the worst. It was in the form of a celebration, over which Felix Northem presided, his squat body elegant, his short legs hidden under the table. The face Tony had seen menacing behind the window that morning was benevolent. The prominent lip curled, the planes around the high cheek bones were flat and smooth.

"My dear children, this is one of the happiest moments in my life," he said in a speech he seemed to think expected of him. "Your union fulfills my dearest wish." He went on to say what splendid things they could do together, and suggested an immediate marriage in Cannes.

His eyes roved from face to face, only pausing a second at Ray Sheldon's empty chair. For Ray had begged off. He had one of his headaches, and had asked Tony to tell Fritz he wanted only a wing of chicken and champagne.

Tony looked just once at Marie. She sat rather quietly, her lips sweet in repose, her hair burning darkly in a snood, her eyes bluer than Tony had ever seen them. She kept turning toward Ray's vacant place, as if she expected him to be there, provoking as usual.

When the interminable dinner was over, and Eve and Eric Thelme had each toasted the event on a last-minute wave of sentiment, Marie sought Tony.

"Do go and find out how Ray is." Her hand played with her white gown. "It isn't like Ray to miss a party. He always said when I was engaged, we'd have a large time. 'I'll go right down. I may stay with him.' Tony saw Nina advancing, and left.

Ray Sheldon wasn't in the state-room. A bottle of whisky was on the table. Tony stood with muscles tightening in the pit of his stomach. He looked around as Ray lurched in, closed the door, and backed against it. He wore a white shirt, flannel trousers and sneakers. He was shaking and he was cold sober.

Ray stared at Tony without seeing him. Then he groped to his bed, and sat on the edge of it. His jaws chattered. Tony poured him a drink, without saying a word. It was no time to say anything.

Ray's teeth clicked against the glass. He drank deeply. Then he looked at Tony, his small face a pasty gray, his lips ashen.

"I'm scared!" he muttered. "Terribly scared!"

The state-room grew quiet. So real was his terror that Ray Sheldon couldn't speak for a while. Tony worth didn't hurry him, although he himself, was taut with suspense. Marie's engagement, the guestly dinner to celebrate it; Felix Northem, bloated with pride, applauding his own handiwork—all the fateful possibilities of the situation had shaken Tony to his roots. And now Ray Sheldon had messed things up further, because he couldn't keep his fingers out of other people's affairs.

Tony's patience suddenly gave way. He marched up to the jittery little man and harshly demanded, "Where have you been? Didn't I beg you this morning to do nothing without consulting me?"

"I don't know why I should consult you," Ray answered, with a ghost of defiance. Then he crumpled again. "I've never had such an experience in all my life!" He groaned, and couldn't go on. His small features seemed shrunken; his thin body seemed shrunken; his thin features were nipped. He looked like a middle-aged playboy who had climbed into the wrong window and taken a beating.

The ship's bells rang six frail notes. It was eleven o'clock. Tony heard a slight noise in the corridor. He moved to the door; flung it open. Horseshoe, Marie's French maid, stood there, trim in black dress with white. She stared in surprise at Tony's grim face.

"Mademoiselle desires to know if Monsieur Sheldon's headache is better," she murmured. She tried to peer around Tony, but his tall figure blocked the door.

"Much better." Tight little muscles relaxed with his smile. He added, "Please tell Miss Schuyler, I am staying with him, and present my excuses."

He watched her trip away before he closed and locked the door. In that moment, a wave of feeling for Marie swept over him. Some girls wouldn't have been so thoughtful of an old friend on a night like this. Then he turned back to Ray.

"Now—pull yourself together and tell me what happened," he said, anxiously. "You weren't cockeyed enough, were you, to try to get into Northem's rooms?"

Ray pulled himself together with another drink, and sat cross-legged on his couch-bed, clutching his glass. He nodded, and whispered, "Hioto caught me."

GRAND THEATRE

The glamour and romance suggested by the soft Brazilian moon, the throbbing rhythm of the Samba, and the tantalizing movements of exotic dancers provide the background for 20th Century-Fox's Technicolor musical, "That Night In Rio," which stars Alice Faye, Don Ameche and Carmen Miranda, and opens Sunday at the Grand Theatre.

This latest cinematic contribution of the studio that produced "Down Argentine Way" and "Tin Pan Alley" is sprinkled with catchy tunes by those master tunesmiths, Mack Gordon and Harry Warren. The vivacious Carmen, who is accompanied by her Banda Da Lua, finds plenty of reason to sing and dance when "Tyi, Yi, Yi, Yi," "Chica, Chica, Boom Chic," "Boa Noite" (Good Night), "They Met In Rio" and "The Baron Is In Conference" are played.

RITZ THEATRE

What's next for Andy Hardy? Mickey Rooney, who has made this particular lad an American household word, is pondering this weighty problem. In the newest of the Hardy Family series, "Andy Hardy's Private Secretary," coming to the Ritz Theatre today for an engagement of one day, Andy passes an important milestone. He graduates from high school.

"That leaves two courses open to him," says Rooney. "Either he can go on to college or he can get himself a job."

MAURI ROSE HEADS DRIVERS' LIST FOR LANGHORNE RACES

Rene Le Begue and Jean Trevoux, Champions of France, Will Also Compete

100-MILE CLASSIC

Rose Will Pilot Powerful Noc-Out Special Owned By Lou Moore

America's greatest automobile racing classic since the great Indianapolis Speedway classic Decoration Day will be run tomorrow at the world's fastest mile Langhorne Speedway.

As great as the event itself was the field of drivers which lists entrants from Vichy, France, and for all sections of the United States.

The European colors are Rene LeBegue and Jean Trevoux, France's European champions, who will bid for supremacy in the world's first International match race.

Heading the roster of Americans is Mauri Rose, winner of the Indianapolis 500-mile classic, who will battle against the Frenchmen in three races with Tommy Hinnershitz, of Reading, Pa., tenth at Indianapolis, as his driving partner. Rose will pilot the powerful Noc-Out Special owned by Lou Moore, which Rose drove to victory in the "500." It will be the first time in Langhorne's 16-year history that an Indianapolis winner has driven his victory car in the world's fastest mile oval. Hinnershitz will drive the Joe Marks Miller which carried to him his first "big break" at Indianapolis.

Before the hard speed-burned mile has cooled from the blistering pace of the international match, America's greatest drivers will bid for the richest purse of the local season in the 100 mile classic. BRISTOL A. A. TO PLAY GERMAN-AMERICAN IX

By Jack Gill

The Bristol A. A. will make an effort to regain its winning ways this Sunday afternoon at Kensington and Torresdale avenues when they tangle with the German-American club of the Philadelphia League.

Bristol, playing strictly top-notch opposition, hasn't recorded a triumph since their opening win over Atlantic City. Old Jupe Pluvius interfered with their game carded against the Black Meteors and the Pleasantville contest was abandoned when players met with motor trouble enroute to the scene of action. Fischer's handed the locals a decisive beating and Kensington notched a win over the charges of Manager Mulholland.

At the start of the season fans thought that they might have a strong semi-pro sandlot aggregation representing the town. A cast of players whose family names have filled the city directory for years made the outfit look all the more creamy. If the team really did click, barked the followers, it would be truly a representative nine.

Sunday the homesters must rebound and show that they belong in fast company. These players are all products of the Bristol league. Thus far they haven't shown to advantage against their city slicking cousins. But as the season progresses the squad as a whole may work together as a unit more effectively.

The hitting hasn't exactly startled. It is evident that a hard, swash-buckling ace is needed. But the pitching has held up remarkably well against powerful swinging Philly combines. Sunday Stan Dick, ace of the locals' stag and undoubtedly the best hurler in the Bristol Twilight League to date, will face the German-Americans. Jesse Vanzant will handle his slants and Mulholland is hoping for a break and a base hit or two.

Defense Council

Outlines Its Work

means all those measures which are necessary to protect the mass of citizens in time of emergency, including health, fire protection, lines of communication, property, protection against subversive activities, refugee feeding and house, etc.

2. Will the Local Defense Council replace existing organizations? No—quite the contrary. Many of the required emergency services and activities are already provided for, in a greater or lesser degree, by official or benevolent organizations already long in existence. It is the task of the Local Defense Council to co-ordinate the existing services and to supplement them, where necessary,—so that the resources of the County as a whole will be mobilized and usable in a defense emergency. The Local Defense Council is the recognized official organization in the community, through which all matters dealing in any way with defense may be cleared.

The Council reports to and co-operates with the State Defense Council, which in turn reports to the Federal Government's civilian defense organization, which is headed by Mayor LaGuardia.

3. When will anything concrete be done by the Local Defense Council?

Thus far, the Council has been engaged in surveying the existing facilities of the County, through twelve committees that have been appointed. This work is going ahead rapidly. It is necessary to know what we have before attempting to make final plans. The co-operation of the Burgesses of the various Boroughs of the County is being requested by personal calls and discussions.

As specific types of activity are decided upon, there will be full opportunity for every citizen to enlist in some phase of local defense and complete success depends upon the co-operation of every individual citizen of the county.

None can know the extent of the emergency which may develop. We all hope for the best, but it is only prudent to be prepared for the worst. We hope our buildings will not be consumed by fire, but we still take out fire insurance. There may well be no time to make plans when and if the full emergency is upon us.

The members of the Local Defense Council serve without compensation, as a civic duty.

The Council is a non-partisan body, representative of many activities and sections. Its sole objective is the safety and health of the county. It needs and is confident that it will receive, the full co-operation of all the people.

The next meeting will be June 20, 1941, 8 o'clock p. m., D. S. T., at the headquarters of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, Doylestown, Pa.

July 1st Set As Second Registration Day

Harrisburg, June 14—Governor James, in support of President Roosevelt's action, today proclaimed July 1st as the second registration day for selective service.

On that day, approximately 65,000 men who have reached the age of 21 years since last October 16th, except those deferred by law, are required to register for military service at registration boards in Pennsylvania.

Tanker Damaged In Explosion; 5 Hurt

Philadelphia, June 14—Lifting the bow of the vessel out of the water and tossing the victims in the air, a terrific explosion early today rocked the 3,164-ton Venezuelan oil tanker, Caroni, and injured five members of her crew.

The blast occurred while the men were preparing to enter the forward storage tank of the vessel which had docked at a South Philadelphia pier yesterday and discharged her cargo of oil from the Venezuelan Island of Margarita.

It was estimated that three months would be needed to repair damage done the ship, thus temporarily reducing by one the number of tankers available to serve the Atlantic seaboard during a threatened forthcoming oil shortage.

The tank in which the blast occurred was one of three storage compartments on the boat. All of the tanks had been cleaned by live steam and seamen were ready to enter the first hold to shovel out sediment. Officers said an electric light bulb being lowered into the compartment apparently became broken, the hot filament touching off vapors still lingering below deck.

Police and customs guards said there was no indication of sabotage but said they "understood" FBI agents were investigating. The Caroni was owned by the Mene Grande Oil Co., of Venezuela, and was docked at a Gulf Refining Co. pier in the Schuylkill River.

RAF Spreads Havoc

London, June 14—Hundreds of British planes last night spread destruction through the Ruhr industrial district for the third successive night, three Nazi warships were reported blasted at Brest, and today Government officials said six German supply ships were sunk on trans-Atlantic shipping lanes.

Continuing the relentless sea hunt which was climaxed by sinking of the battleship Bismarck, the Admiralty announced, British warships and planes have just rounded up their sixth supply ship out of the fleet which put to sea with the pride of the German Navy.

In Brest, many bombs were seen to burst across the dock area and straddle the berths of the Nazi battleships Gneisenau and Scharnhorst, which had been crippled in repeated earlier raids.

American Women Detected By Silk Hose

haps I will too some day.

At each station the train took on more and more troops—that too was something new for me. We're only just beginning to get used to uniforms back in the States. Besides, war-time troops, such as Hollywood portrays, are a grimy, ageless lot. These English were young and filled with a healthful eagerness. They laughed and joked together and didn't seem to notice that they were standing on a jolting train. Few bothered to unaging their heavy packs.

My friend and I sat silent for a while, watching. Terribly proud, she remarked: "They're a fine lot, aren't they?" I envied her being able to say that in a possessive tone of voice and her next question became mine at that moment. "When are your American boys coming over?" She'd never been to America but she had a strong visual idea of New York its skyscrapers and smartly dressed women. She seemed eager to know of the life I'd just left behind, so I told her of the hip-lengthed jacket, the flounced skirt and the drive for bigger and better flowered hats. "Oh, we have them too. You see, war or no war, we're able to keep up." She was quite content and I was glad, very glad, because I hadn't wanted to tell her about New York, the town where girls still worry about the latest "hair-do." I had feared she might feel she was missing something, however unimportant, something that women the world over care about. The war hadn't changed her and it wasn't going to.

Eventually we came back to the subject of stockings. Pointing to her heavier lisle ones, she explained that they were really more serviceable than mine. She wasn't trying to rationalize, she was proud of them and for what they stood for and I got off the train feeling rather ashamed of my fine American ones. One day in London was all I needed to realize that the first English woman I met was not unique. She was only one of the great majority who are still unaffected in their daily life by the war. I vaguely anticipated finding the streets filled with sloppy women in unpressed slacks. Instead I found the same old London (with reservations, true) and the same smartly-suited brisk women. Many wore uniforms, but that more than anything accentuated, for me, the business-like way they take this war.

My first shopping tour took in a well-known department store; it too looked quite normal, except it was very crowded, not with the bustling, pushing Christmas crowd one sees in New York, but with calm individuals who understand that with the present shortage of shopgirls, one has to wait one's turn in a queue. With interest I passed through many departments, their offerings were not unlike what I was used to seeing at home. These English women may not have my silk stockings, but they have something else, something I'd like to catch hold of, because it's pretty important.
